

David Aaron, London

Frieze Masters makes a big thing of its stretch from the ancient to the modern, but this colossus must be its one of its oldest ever objects. Yes, it's a dinosaur, and it dates from the Cretaceous period, some 65 million years ago. Dug up in Montana a few years ago, its skull is 90 per cent complete and 50 per cent of its body is intact – which explains its $20m price tag. It makes the objects around it, from ancient Egypt, Rome and elsewhere, look positively contemporary.