Family of shot WPC are denied justice

Evidence against Libyan prime suspect in 2014 murder of Wpc Fletcher is blocked

By Martin Warner, in the Telegraph
 The family of a woman shot by a British soldier in Libya last year have been denied access to evidence that could help them identify her killer. The family says that the British government has blocked access to the evidence, which includes the soldier's diary and a letter he wrote to his mother. Tax, borrow, spend. Corbyn is Hugo Chavez on steroids

Commentary
 By Jeremy Pearce
 The Labour Party's new leader, Jeremy Corbyn, has a reputation for being a socialist. He has promised to increase the minimum wage, to introduce a 23-hour week, and to nationalize the banks. He has also promised to increase the income tax on the wealthy. He has also promised to increase the income tax on the wealthy.

21 MARCH 2017 - 7:00AM

There has been hot competition for vacant stands at Masterpiece, London's swankiest summer season fair. In the course of normal turnover for a young fair, a clutch of antiques and modern art dealers have made way for 26 new exhibitors giving some indication of how the fair's character is evolving.

In antiquities, David Aaron will focus on Islamic works of art, while Asian art dealer John Berwald will mix oriental grace with modern British art. Old Master dealers De Jonckheere, Derek Johns and Sarto will add gravitas to the mix.

"The fair will reflect the market of today," says chairman Philip Hewat-Jaboor, with additional galleries showing modern and contemporary art; notably Kalman Maklary from Budapest and Paul Kasmin from New York.

Modern Decorative Arts are boosted with galleries Chastel Marechal and Mathivet from Paris. Photography has a greater presence with specialist dealers Peter Fetterman, and Bernheimer from Switzerland whose 1940 vintage print of Lisa with Turban by Horst P Horst ($120,000 / £97,000) epitomises the glamour of the fair.
