

MARBLE MARVEL

A life-size marble sculpture of a triceratops skull was unveiled in Berkeley Square last month.

Created by sculptor Paul Vanstone in collaboration with natural history and antiquities specialist David Aaron, it is part of the Berkeley Square Public Art Programme, which brings natural history into the heart of London. Installed at the northern end of the square, the sculpture will remain on display for two years.

Vanstone took inspiration from a 68-million-year-old sub-adult triceratops skull exhibited by David Aaron at Frieze Masters 2025. He said: "The sculpture is the same size as a sub-adult triceratops. The idea that these creatures walked this planet, charging at this angle, you get a strong sense of their presence on this planet. I wanted to portray their great scale and power."

ART DECO DELIGHT

Sheraton Grand London Park Lane has unveiled its renovated Art Deco Palm Court Lounge & Bar – home to the hotel's celebrated afternoon tea and lively cocktail bar. It coincides with the centenary of the art deco movement and marks a key milestone before the hotel's centenary in 2027.

The refreshed interiors blend the spirit of the 1920s with contemporary style and are designed to capture the glamour and vitality of the jazz age in an elegant and timeless setting.

The atmosphere is further elevated by live piano performances from Thursday to Sunday, bringing jazz age charm to the heart of Palm Court.

To mark the reopening, the hotel has a renewed food and drink programme that celebrates the glamour of its art deco heritage.

MILESTONE FOR MUEHLE

Flemings Mayfair's managing director Henrik Muehle joined 100 other business leaders for his fifth CEO Sleepout UK at Lords Cricket Ground, spending the night outdoors in a sleeping bag.

The annual event highlights the realities of homelessness while raising vital funds for Charity Begins at Home, a grassroots, donation-funded organisation providing warm meals, clothing and essential items to people experiencing homelessness.

Muehle, who has raised £120,000 for the charity to date, said: "One cold night outside doesn't compare to the daily reality of homelessness, but it reinforces why this work matters. Reaching the £120,000 milestone is incredibly meaningful, but the true reward is helping create real change for those who need it most."
